DESIGNING A CUSTOM WINE CELLAR

Custom wine cellars have come into their own as “must-have” enhancements for upscale new and existing homes. A growing number of wine enthusiasts with a keen interest in wine collecting want a place in the home to preserve their prized acquisitions. Not surprisingly, a custom wine cellar can also contribute significantly to the value of a home.

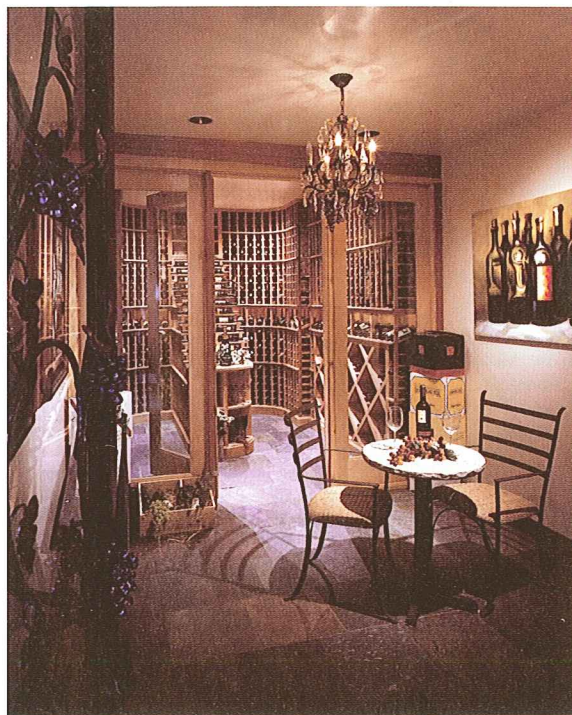

A custom wine cellar reflects the owner’s unique taste and storage requirements. The dominant construction material used in fabricating wine cellar racking is wood. Specialty woods such as all-heart redwood and mahogany as well as oak and other selected hardwoods are most frequently used. Recent innovations include formed dimensional stainless steel racking that can stand alone or integrate gracefully with wood designs.

Wine cellars can occupy small intimate closets or large spaces intended to be architectural centerpieces that house hundreds if not thousands of bottles. Such cellars are most often found in the home of a serious wine collector or enthusiast. Cellars can be simple environmentally controlled storage spaces or elaborate works of art.

Typically, artisans and craftsmen with a great deal of knowledge and expertise are called upon to design and fabricate these cellars. They have a unique talent for combining wood, rock, wood and tile flooring, metal and lighting to create truly remarkable masterpieces. Beyond the aesthetic considerations, these cellars are engineered to keep wine at just the right temperature and humidity to ensure proper aging and longevity.

Designing and fabricating custom wine cellars is a thriving business in the Valley of the Sun, fueled by a healthy wine enthusiast community and a building boom that shows no sign of slowing.

Scottsdale’s Innovative Wine Cellar Designs, among the area’s premier designers of custom wine cellars, houses the largest showroom in the Southwest and features some of the extraordinary work of master designer and owner Sandy Horwitz. Architects, custom home designers and interior decorators throughout the area rely on Sandy and his firm to provide the right design to satisfy their clients’ budgets and design requirements. If you are planning to add a wine cellar to your home, speak to Sandy or an associate and find out about the many options for creating your own custom cellar.

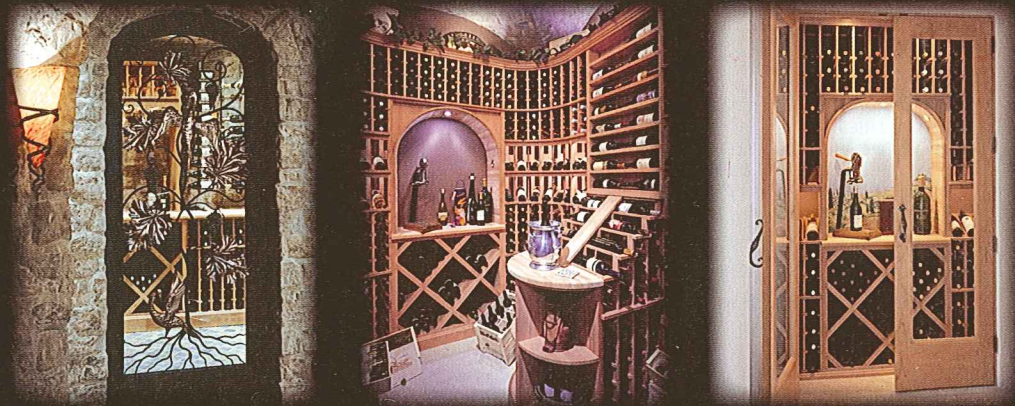

A customized wine cellar helps to preserve your prized vintages and adds value to your home.
